

Life

Life is good, life is sacred, life is wonderful. Life for the Doctor in her TARDIS has been difficult, two companion deaths weigh heavily on a Time Lord's mind. Memories of happier times fill the Doctor's head, times that were full of life and wonder and happiness. Bobby and Millie were still alive, and they were one happy family. But something about these memories seems off, her ex-companions' faces are wrong, they both look like Heather. And there's someone there who shouldn't be. A shadowy man lurks just at the edge of the memories, but whenever the Doctor notices him, he fades away in a burst of static. The Doctor goes deeper and deeper in pursuit of the shadowy man until finally they meet face to face. The Valeyard has returned, and he's determined that the Doctor will never experience life again.

Death

Death. Death is coming. Death is here, death is outside, there is no escape. Death stalks the Doctor wherever she goes, nobody is safe from death's icy grip when the Doctor is near. Surrounded by the bodies of her fallen friends and associates, death has finally come for the Doctor. Trapped in her own mind by The Valeyard, she is living out her own personal nightmares. Watching her companions die over and over again whilst The Valeyard taunts her. Her mind is slowly shattering, splitting her sanity into pieces but there's one thing that will never break, her determination. She is determined to bring down the Dream Lord and trap him in his own personal hell where he can be sealed off for eternity. The Doctor has returned, and she's determined that the Valeyard will experience death for eternity.